Hint 1

You caught yourself realizing that you haven't heard the noise of the bazaar or the other usually crowded streets of the City for quite some time. Perhaps you've been thinking too hard about how to help the Seeker answer the questions before him, and didn't notice how the City's artery led you out to a strange, deserted wasteland.

There was no one here except for a faint wind, lazily kicking scraps of paper and other trash along the dusty street, and some broken stalls that had clearly once sold something like meat or fish.

And also a completely out-of-place phone booth for the City, standing in the middle of the wasteland, as if staring at you with its unblinking small windows.

Confused, you approached it and saw that the receiver, like a lifeless stump, was hanging from torn wires. You stepped out of the booth and walked around it. On its far side, a poster was glaring at you menacingly.
